A person . . .

. . . is a building,
each stone a gift from someone else. We give our stones, some big and beautiful, others small but strong, and . . .

they always fit — somewhere.
Our stone may be the cornerstone in the foundation or perhaps it's a stone in the steeple.

Time passes, and the building goes on. They say a lot of stones
get covered some day —
by other stones that is —
but I like to think they're still there.

Faculty

Administration

At first we saw them as part of the administrative machine. We wanted to criticize, but we realized that they solved the problems we only talked about. When we were idealistic, they had to be realistic and practical.

Dr. Brubaker assumed full responsibilities as Principal this year. Mr. Hess assisted him. Mr. Stoner continued duties as Business Manager. As Guidance Counselor, Mr. Dietz worked with scheduling. Mr. Messner, a new member of our faculty, raised funds. Mr. Newswanger served as Public Relations Chairman. They worked together to maintain an educational atmosphere.

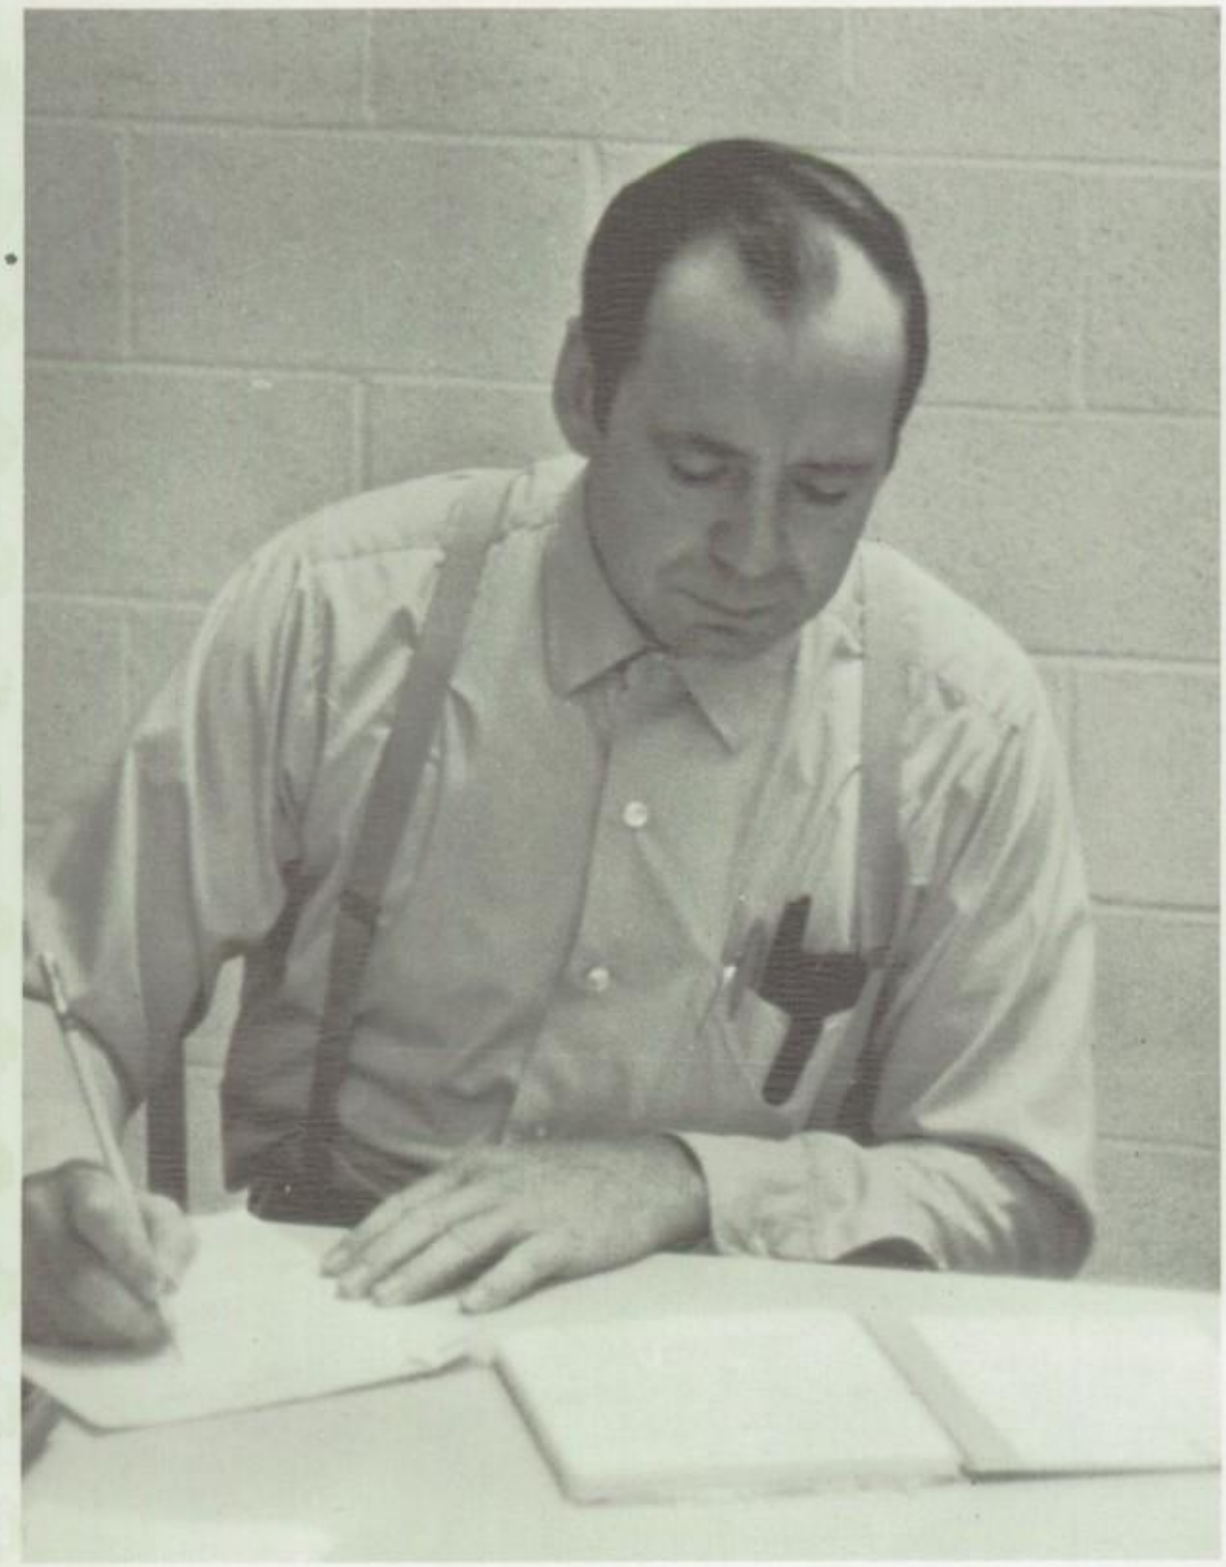
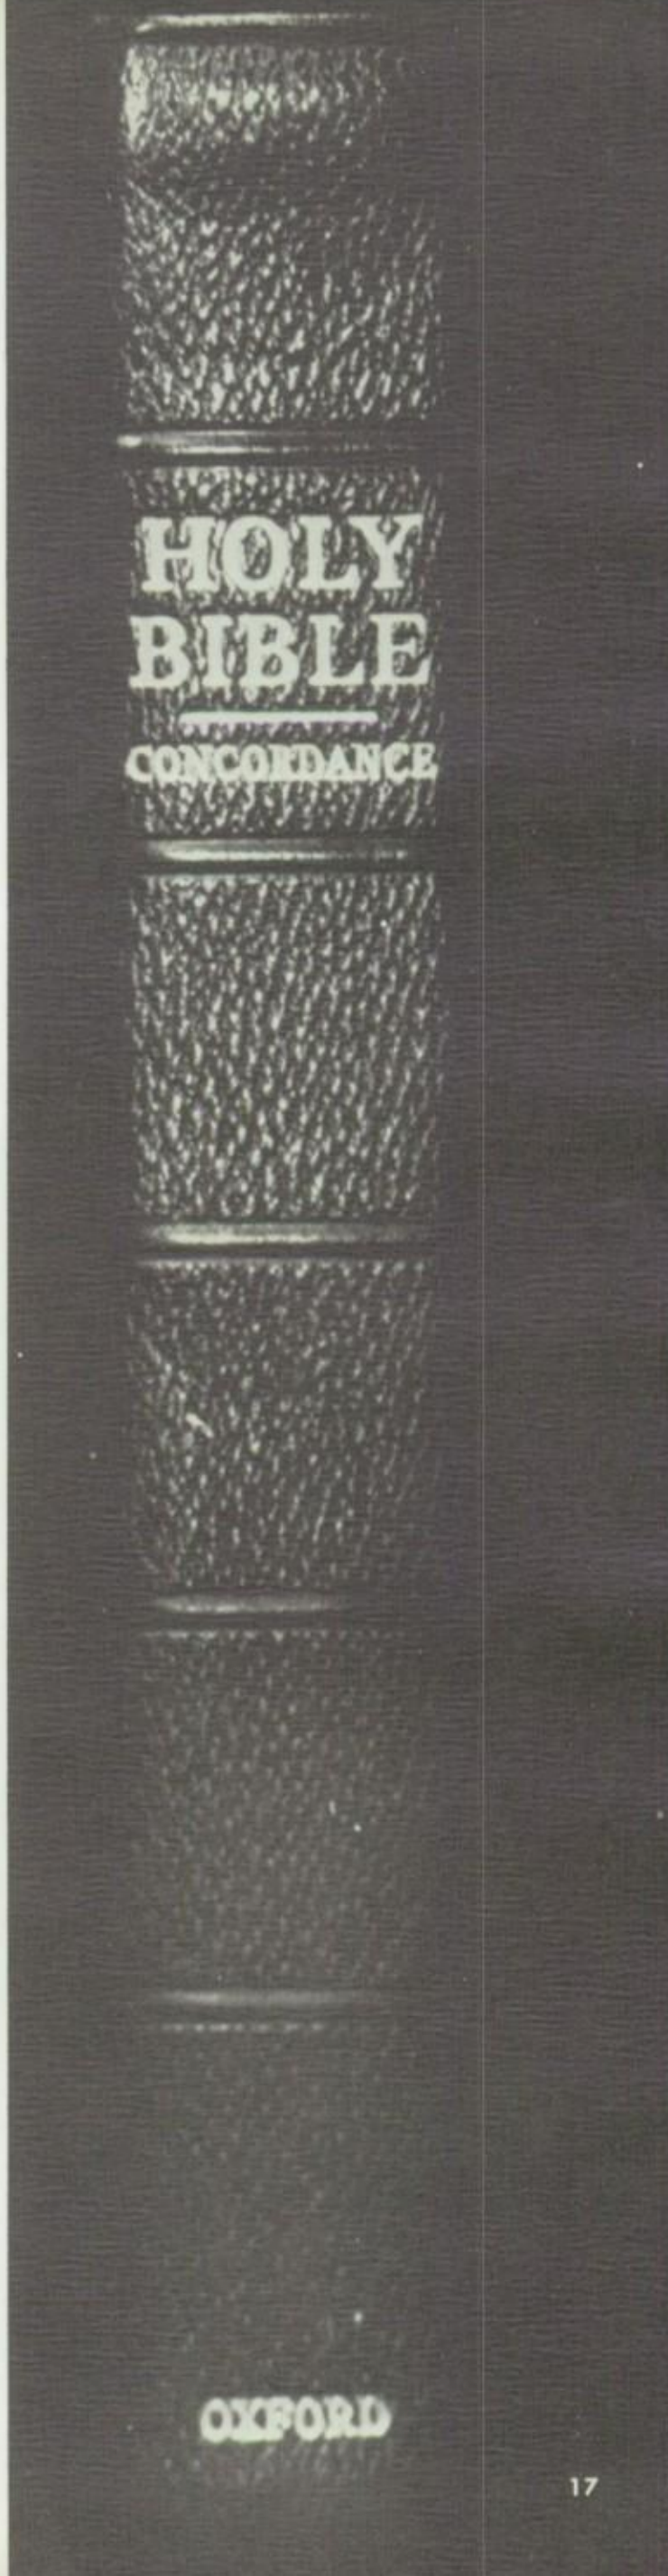
A Search for Relevance

Bible classes are a unique characteristic of the L.M.H. curriculum. We asked hard questions about faith or discussed a controversial issue in these classes. We studied the Bible in courses varying from Bible Doctrine to Practical Christian Living.





Communication

Ten new courses were added to the English curriculum this year. Shakespeare, Reading for Enjoyment, Reading Techniques, and Contemporary Reading emphasized reading. Creative Writing, Public Speaking, Composition, and Journalistic Writing helped us develop our skills of self-expression. Literature of the Bible and Black American Literature opened new vistas of cultural heritage. Essentially, we learned to understand and communicate ideas.

World of Discovery

Our many experiences in science class taught us the principles of the world around us. We learned about chemical reactions, rock formations, the travel of light rays, or genetics. Advanced Biology students took a Saturday canoe trip through a New Jersey bog. But we learned more than facts. We learned to observe, experiment, and discover.

Some of us found that two years of math courses was enough; for others, Advanced Math offered an opportunity for intriguing study. Quadratic equations, logarithms, congruent triangles, and Venn diagrams taught us to think in an orderly fashion. Selected Topics helped us to see math as a humane endeavor.

Exploring Society: Past and Present

We found our history courses too broad to cover in one year. We divided American History and World Cultures into more specific courses: Colonial and Divided America, America: An Emerging Power, Contemporary America, Asia and the Middle East, Early European Cultures, Modern European Cultures, Africa and Latin America. We studied man as a conqueror, a slave, a discoverer, and a barbarian. In Sociology we studied mans interaction with others; in Economics we learned to handle money.

Practicing Manual Skills

Some of us preferred manual work to paper work. We designed gun racks and worked with leather in shop. In home economics we tried new recipes and designed clothing. Art class provided opportunity to practice artistic skills.

Practical business courses prepared us for a future job. We learned bookkeeping, typing, shorthand, and how to operate office equipment.

Our music experiences depended on our interests. Some of us sang in several of the five choral groups. Three theory courses and Music History and Appreciation expanded the scope of music courses this year.

Molding Minds and Bodies

In physical education we learned to serve a tennis ball, make a foul shot, and wear green gym suits.

Health classes adopted a new method of learning. Instead of listening to lectures, we studied our text books.

In driver education we learned driving regulations in the classroom and developed our driving ability behind the wheel.

The cooks prepared meals and washed dishes. The janitors repaired machinery and trimmed the campus. But in performing these functions, their joyful spirit was evident.

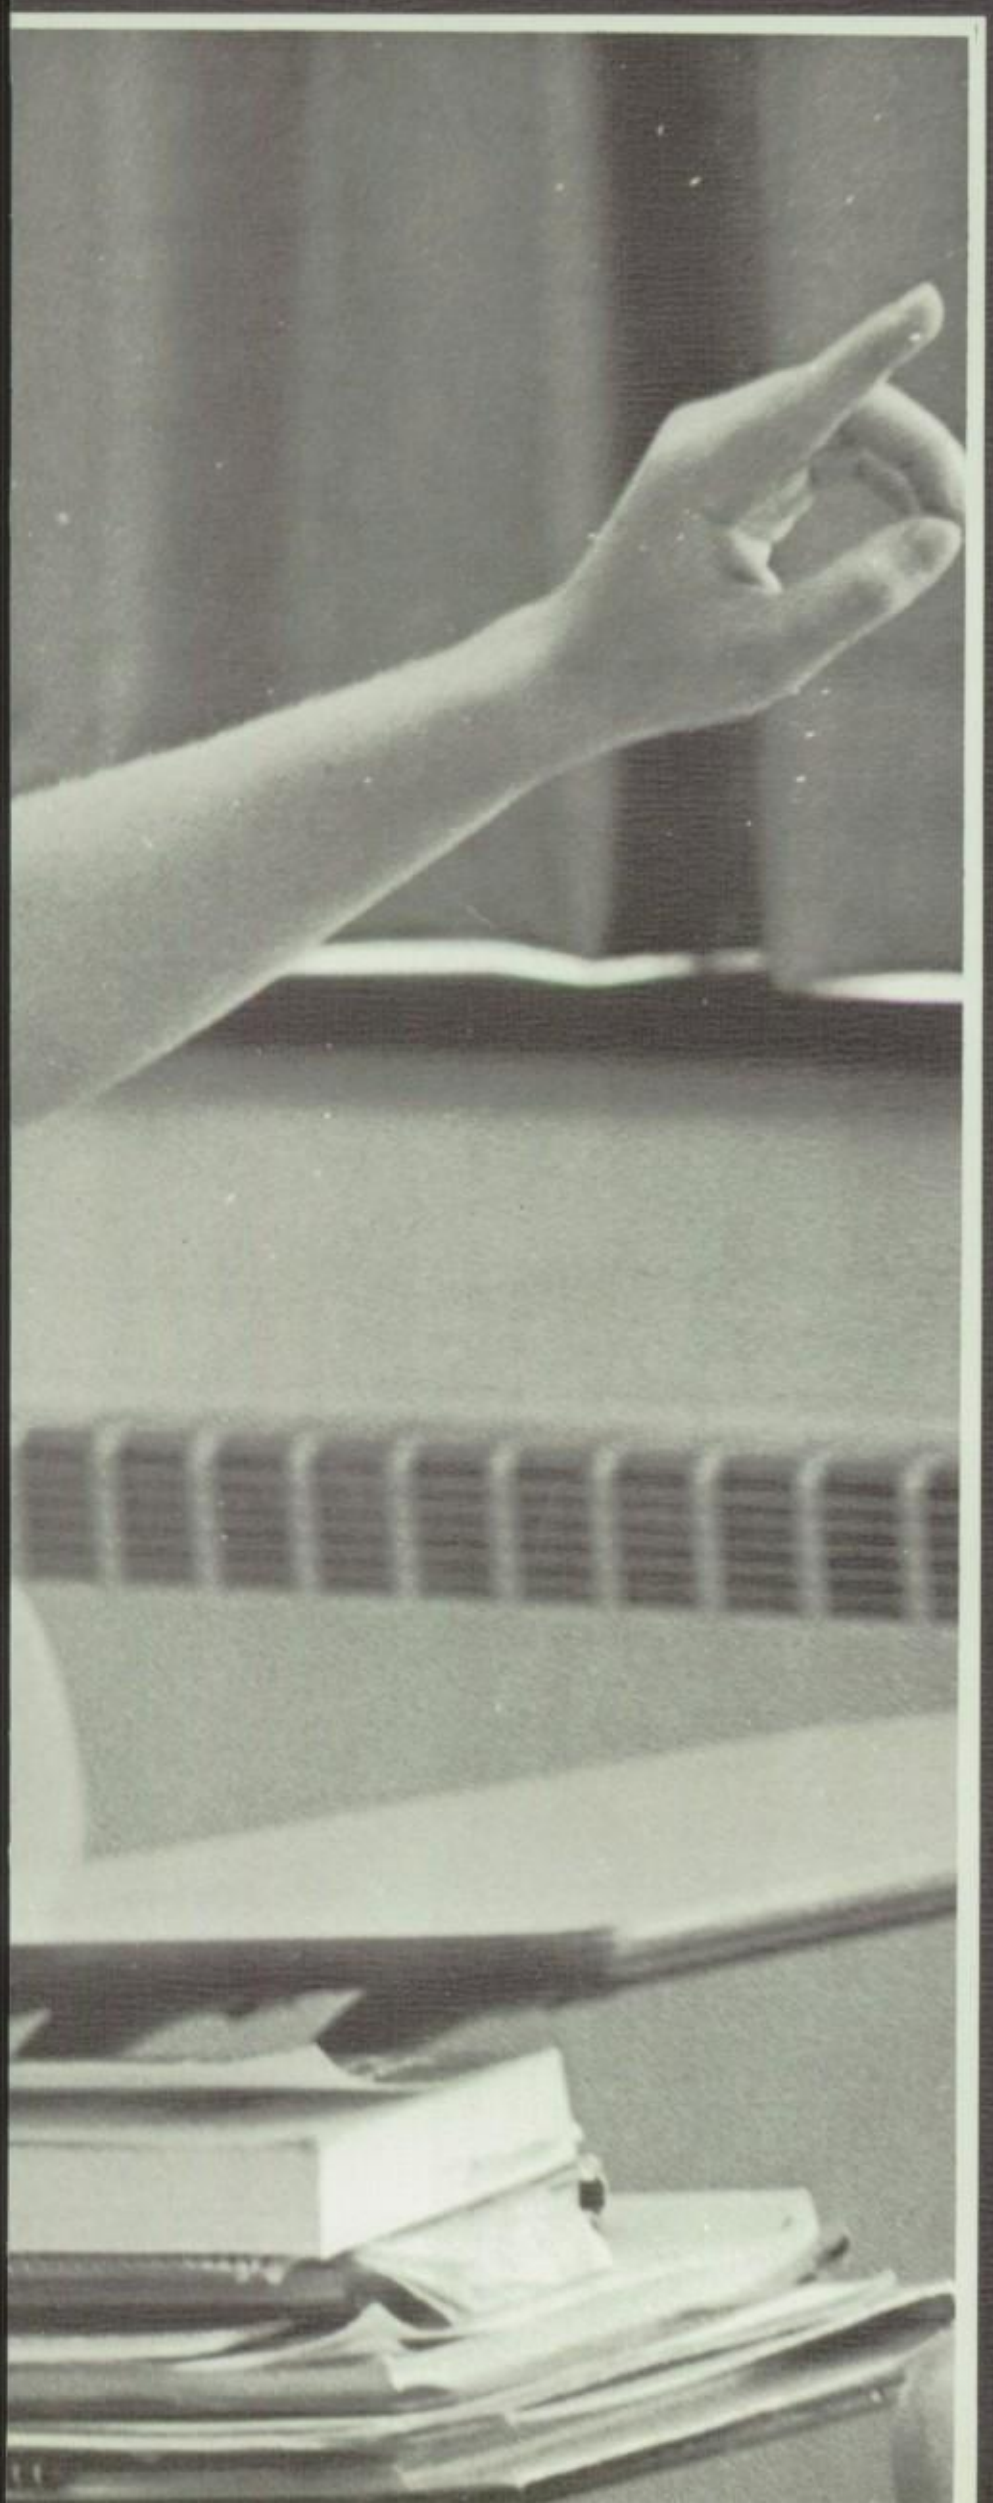
Behind the Scenes

Secretaries typed letters, answered phone calls, balanced accounts, and answered our questions.

We practiced research techinques in the library. The librarians catalogued five hundred new books this year.

Most of the dorm advisors were new this year. But their newness did not handicap them. They quickly adjusted to dorm routine. We were guided by capable persons.



Classes

Freshmen

We came to L.M.H. the first day of school, excited, a little scared, but mostly anxious. There were so many new faces and new ways to act which everyone seemed to know.

But that all changed. We soon found that we did belong. The seniors thought of us as ninth graders, but we didn't think so.

We were the freshmen.

Sophomores

As we experienced another year at L.M.H., we sensed a deeper feeling of responsibility and became more involved in the school. We helped to strengthen the Junior Varsity teams, and struggled with heavier assignments. A new aspect of school for us was sharing in classes with freshmen. From this we learned to appreciate others as well as ourselves.

Juniors

For a Thanksgiving program, we held an imitation church service. A short conversation presented at the end of the program portrayed the hypocrisy of our Mennonite Thanksgiving celebration.

Half of us were new at L.M.H. this year, and at socials we became acquainted with each other. We participated in Student Council, athletics, and other school organizations.

We learned

We were soon to leave L.M.H.S. to face the future, which undoubtedly holds challenges and excitement as well as problems and responsibilities for each one of us. For this reason, we tried to enjoy and remember the events of our year. Our two-day trip to Washington, D.C., was one of our highlights, along with Christmas caroling and applesnitzing. We supplied the leaders of Student Council and set examples for the underclassmen. Graduation took a lot of planning and anticipation. These activities, along with friendships, provided unity and prepared us for the future.

Organizations

Our

A basic accomplishment of Student Council this year was the formulating of a new constitution. Money from Student Council concession stands increased the amount in the athletic fund. The Council also worked for more student involvement in chapel.

Left, Jacqueline Landis, Secretary, J. Clarence Ebersole, Vice President.

Mill Stream — a Current of Events

Challenged by the task of producing ten issues high in reader appeal, The Mill Stream staff strove to develop a more relevant newspaper. This meant composing more issue and idea-centered articles rather than the mere reporting of events.

Journalism class served as a base for the reporters whose job was creating articles written in polished journalistic style; articles that guided the reader to the depth of the controversial issues at LMH.

Laurel Wreath — A Memoir of Our Year

The primary goal of the yearbook staff was to record the story of our year. We improved upon last year's errors in order to produce a more nearly perfect yearbook. Our greatest innovation was the self-designed cover.

On Mondays at 12:32 we met to plan activities for the following week, and new tasks were assigned. We helped each other meet deadlines, so we could give you this yearbook.

"God's Green Pastures"

Campus Chorale

The theme of this year's Campus Chorale program was "God's Green Pastures." The group met the last period of each day for practices. Their schedule included a morning chapel service and programs in several local churches.

"Alleuia"

With the mellow tones of "Hear This Wondrous Story" Men's Chorus opened the annual Christmas program. Their selections were followed by those of Ladies', Campus Chorale, and Senior Choruses. Modern carols of Christmas were used in this program. Hymn-style songs and old favorites were featured in the spring program as well as selections of "Music from the Masters."

Needle Craft Club

Lower left, Anne prepares to rethread her needle. Lower right, Glenda works on he rug with determination. Below, Ruth smiles upon her creation.

Needlecraft Club had various purposes. It attempted to teach the members new needlecraft ideas. It also provide a relaxed atmosphere and encouraged creativity in choosing original designs and patterns. There was a feeling of accomplishment in a finished product.

Chef Club

Friday afternoons found a group of fellows trying their skills at cooking. Assisted by Miss Alta Hoover, the fellows, not only had a good time, but also learned the basics to preparing meals.

Lower left, Mark wonders why he has to measure everything. Upper right, J. Clarence samples the batter. Lower right, Nathan is stuck with the dirty work.

Radio Club

Upper left: Ron practices Morse code.
Upper middle: Radio club members learn to operate the lighting board.

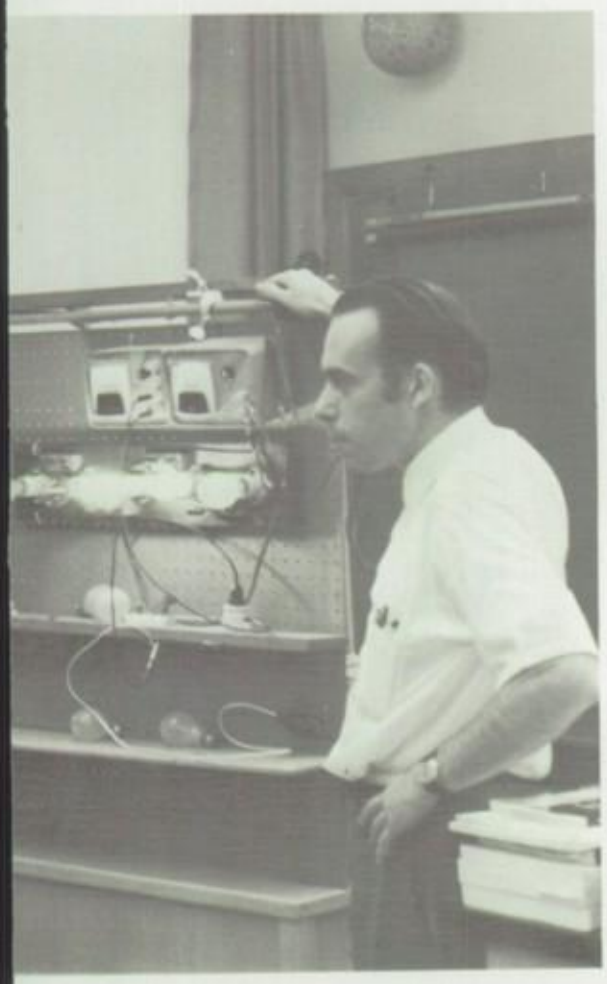
and Nurses Club



Every Friday, four fellows met to form radio club. They began their study with code practice. Later, they discovered principles of electronics and were taught how to operate several electronic machines. This experience helped the fellows obtain an amateur radio license. When they have received their license, they are able to make contacts with other states, from which they have received several codes.

Under the direction of Mrs. Wenger, Nurses' Club met to learn and practice the preliminary steps to becoming a nurse. Club members made Thanksgiving favors which they distributed to the guests at the Oreville Home. Films and an occasional speaker informed the girls of various areas of nursing.

Photo Club

Peace Club

Peace Club was one of the new clubs offered this year. It sponsored films which attempted to educate students on peace and social issues. The films were shown during 5th period free-time and were open to everyone. A small admissions fee was charged to raise funds for the club.

Lower left: "I believe in peace."

Psychology Club, First Aid Club, and . . .

Carl interprets Barry's feelings.

Psych Club was offered to interested students during the second semester. With the help of Mr. Larry Newswanger, students learned to recognize and analyze their own feelings as well as the feelings of others. The club familiarized its members with each other and stimulated the growth of relationships.

Psych Club members express their feelings through crayons.

Bird Study

First Aid Club prepares students to provide immediate care to sick or injured persons. The members are taught how to care for broken bones, cuts, bruises, heart attacks, and strokes. They also learn ways to prevent these sicknesses and injuries. Future nurses are encouraged to take this club because it is an important introduction to nursing care.

Bird Study Club members became acquainted with many of our feathered friends. They learned to appreciate birds and to identify them by sight and call. Hikes, movies, slides, records, and close observation helped the members learn about birds.

Lower left: Mr. Moshier explains the habits of summer birds.
Lower right: "This is the way we use the poster, Larry."

Charismatic Club

Mr. Lentz looks for an answer to Lynetta's question.

Charismatic Club was a newly formed club this year and was only a second semester club. The club members read and discussed the book, Like a Mighty Wind, the story of an Indonesian revival. In addition to reading this book, the club discussed the charismatic movement and sought for ways to apply the Holy Spirit to their lives.

Mill Stream and Laurel Wreath typists had to exercise their fingers and their patience when they received last minute work from the two staffs. Nevertheless, their work was excellently done and very much appreciated.

Dorm Council

The primary function of the Dorm Council was to plan dorm socials. These socials included games, movies, refreshments, and other entertainment. The Council also tried to correct problems and complaints that arose about dorm life.

Sports

Soccer — A Kick in the Right Direction

Soccer served a vital function in the athletic program at LMH. It provided an opportunity to demonstrate Christian sportsmanship and to nuture students' school spirit. Although our fellows acquired only three victories this season, fifteen were given letters for the effort and spirit they displayed.

A new feature of our athletic program this year involved many students. We hosted the three big eastern Mennonite high schools for the soccer tournament.

Fellows' Basketball

Junior Varsity added a new dimension to fellow's varsity basketball this year. Mr. Bueno served as coach of both teams. Black and gold suits worn by the varsity team were also new this year. The fellows played against six other teams and traveled to Newton Square, Belleville, Philadelphia, Exton, and Virginia.
